Reply Comments to the ARRL from Nickolaus E. Leggett

In its comments in this docket, the ARRL supports the concept of reasonable accommodation for amateur radio antennas. This concept does not work because it is too vague, and it forces amateur radio operators into extensive litigation that they cannot afford.

It would be preferable if the Commission specified the minimum height of amateur radio antennas that would have to be accepted by the landlord, condominium management, or home owner association. The size and aspects of these minimum antennas would be set in a public docket where the various values would be balanced. Without such specific Commission rules, few people will ever have the opportunity of an effective amateur radio station in their home.

Respectfully submitted,
